ABSTRACT

The process of economic liberalization and associated structural reform would accelerate rural–urban migration and boost the pace of urbanization. Urbanization is an index of transformation from traditional rural economies to modern industrial. The pace of urbanization is now set to speed up as the country sets to a more rapid growth. Urban India today's is distributed in shape – with a diverse range of large and small spread extensively around the nation. India will probably continue as a path of distributed model of urbanization because this suits.

As the urban population and income increases, demand for every key service such as water, transportation, sewage treatment, low income etc. will increase. India needs to work as several areas to manage its urbanization. This paper endeavors to illuminate the process of urbanization in India with emphasis on level, pattern and trends.
